

The background of the entire image is a photograph of a traditional Korean palace, likely Gyeongbokgung, during the 'blue hour' of dusk. The palace's ornate, multi-tiered roof is illuminated with warm golden lights, contrasting with the deep blue of the twilight sky. The architecture features intricate carvings and traditional Korean design elements. In the foreground, the stone walls and arches of the palace are visible, with a few people walking through the courtyard, adding a sense of scale and life to the scene.

- Pharmacies
  - All pharmacies in Korea are marked with a “약” sign and are well stocked with Western medicine. Most over-the-counter drugs are only available at pharmacies, but basic over-the-counter drugs, like Tylenol or aspirin, can be purchased at convenience stores. Pharmacies are usually closed on Sundays, but many near major transportation hubs and subway stations often stay open.
